USAGE In standard use, kind is used as a normal noun with a singular or a plural, as in the following examples: these kinds of questions are not relevant; this kind of question is not relevant. However, in the following example, kind does not become plural even though it is used with the plural determiner these: these kind of questions are not relevant. The ungrammatical these kind (rather than these kinds) has been recorded since the 14th century and arose because the plural noun (here, questions) is treated as the head of the noun phrase, kind of being regarded almost as if it were a one-word adjective. In English, adjectives are invariable, i.e. they do not agree in number; by analogy kind of is also taken to be invariable. In the British National Corpus, the use these kind is found in 20 per cent of citations for this sense. See also usage at LOT.

– ORIGIN Old English lecgan, of Germanic origin; related to Dutch leggen and German legen, also to LIE[1].

USAGE The verb lay means, broadly, 'put something down', as in they are going to lay the carpet. The past tense and the past participle of this verb is laid, as in they laid the groundwork or she had laid careful plans. The verb lie, on the other hand, means 'be in a horizontal position to rest', as in why don't you lie on the floor? The past tense of this verb is lay (he lay on the floor) and the past participle is lain (she had lain on the bed for hours). Thus, in correct use, lay can be either the past tense of lie or the base form of lay. In practice many speakers make the mistake of using lay, laying, and laid as if they meant lie, lying, lay, and lain. Examples of incorrect use: why don't you lay on the bed (correct form is lie); she was laying on the bed (correct form is lying); he had laid on the floor for hours (correct form is lain).

See ANCIENT LIGHTS.

Visible light is electromagnetic radiation whose wavelength falls within the range to which the human retina responds, i.e. between about 390 nm (violet light) and 740 nm (red). White light consists of a roughly equal mixture of all visible wavelengths, which can be separated to yield the colours of the spectrum, as was first demonstrated conclusively by Newton. In the 20th century it has become apparent that light consists of energy quanta called photons which behave partly like waves and partly like particles. The velocity of light in a vacuum is 299,792 km per second.

– ORIGIN Old English hlot (noun), of Germanic origin; related to Dutch lot, German Los. The original meanings were sense 3 and (by extension) the sense 'a portion assigned to someone'; the latter gave rise to the other noun senses. The pronoun and adverb uses date from the early 19th cent.

USAGE 1 The expressions a lot of and lots of are used before nouns to mean 'a large number or amount of'. In common with other words denoting quantities, lot itself does not normally function as a head noun, meaning that it does not itself determine whether the following verb is singular or plural. Thus, although lot is singular in a lot of people, the verb which follows is not singular. In this case the word people acts as the head noun and, being plural, ensures that the following verb is also plural: a lot of people were assembled (not a lot of people was assembled). See also usage at NUMBER.
2 A lot of and lots of are very common in speech and writing but they still have a distinctly informal feel and are generally not considered acceptable for formal English, where alternatives such as many or a large number are used instead.
3 Written as one word alot is incorrect, although not uncommon.

■ [as noun the Maglemosian] the Maglemosian culture or period.
– ORIGIN early 20th cent.: from Maglemose, the name of a town in Denmark where objects from this culture were found, + -IAN.

maglev /'maglɛv/ ▶ noun [mass noun] (usu. as modifier) a transport system in which trains glide above a track, supported by magnetic repulsion and propelled by a linear motor: maglev trains.
– ORIGIN late 20th cent.: from mag(netic) lev(itation).

magma /'magmə/ ▶ noun 1 [mass noun] hot fluid or semi-fluid material below or within the earth's crust from which lava and other igneous rock is formed by cooling.
■ [count noun] dated, chiefly US a fluid medicinal suspension of a solid.
– DERIVATIVES magmatic adjective.
– ORIGIN late Middle English (in the sense 'residue of dregs after evaporation or pressing of a semi-liquid substance'): via Latin from Greek magma (from massein 'knead').

magma chamber ▶ noun a reservoir of magma within the earth's crust beneath a volcano.

magmatism ▶ noun [mass noun] Geology the motion or activity of magma.

Magna Carta /ˌmagnə 'kɑːtə/ a charter of liberty and political rights obtained from King John of England by his rebellious barons at Runnymede in 1215, which came to be seen as the seminal document of English constitutional practice.
■ [as noun a Magna Carta] a similar document of rights.
– ORIGIN from medieval Latin, 'great charter'.

magna cum laude /ˌmagnə kʌm 'lɔːdi, ˌmagnɑː kʊm 'laʊdeɪ/ ▶ adverb & adjective chiefly N. Amer. with great distinction (with reference to university degrees and diplomas).
– ORIGIN Latin, literally 'with great praise'.

Magna Graecia /ˌmagnə 'griːsɪə, 'griːʃə/ the ancient Greek cities of southern Italy, founded from *c.*750 BC onwards by colonists from Euboea, Sparta, and elsewhere in Greece.
– ORIGIN Latin, literally 'Great Greece'.

magnanimous /mag'nanɪməs/ ▶ adjective very generous or forgiving, especially towards a rival or someone less powerful than oneself: she should be magnanimous in victory.
– DERIVATIVES magnanimity /ˌmagnə'nɪmɪti/ noun, magnanimously adverb.
– ORIGIN mid 16th cent.: from Latin magnanimus (from magnus 'great' + animus 'soul') + -OUS.

magnate /'magneɪt/ ▶ noun a wealthy and influential person, especially in business.
– ORIGIN late Middle English: from late Latin magnas, magnat- 'great man', from Latin magnus 'great'.

magnesia /mag'niːʒə, -zɪə, -ʃə/ ▶ noun [mass noun] Chemistry magnesium oxide.
• Chem. formula: MgO.
■ hydrated magnesium carbonate used as an antacid and laxative.
– ORIGIN late Middle English (referring to a mineral said to be an ingredient of the philosopher's stone): via medieval Latin from Greek Magnēsia, denoting a mineral from Magnesia in Asia Minor.

magnesian /mag'niːzɪən, -ʒ(ə)n/ ▶ adjective (chiefly of rocks and minerals) containing or relatively rich in magnesium.

magnesite /'magnɪsʌɪt/ ▶ noun [mass noun] a whitish mineral consisting of magnesium carbonate, used as a refractory lining in some furnaces.

magnesium /mag'niːzɪəm/ ▶ noun the chemical element of atomic number 12, a silver-white metal of the alkaline earth series. It is used to make strong lightweight alloys, especially for the aerospace industry, and is also used in flash bulbs and pyrotechnics, as it burns with a brilliant white flame. (Symbol: Mg) magnesium flare (also magnesium light) ▶ noun a brilliant white flare containing metallic magnesium wire or ribbon.

magnet ▶ noun a piece of iron (or an ore, alloy, or other material) which has its component atoms so ordered that the material exhibits properties of magnetism, such as attracting other iron-containing objects or aligning itself in an external magnetic field.
■ archaic term for LODESTONE. ■ figurative a person or thing that has a powerful attraction: the beautiful stretch of white sand is a magnet for sun worshippers.
– ORIGIN late Middle English (denoting lodestone): from Latin magnes, magnet-, from Greek magnēs lithos 'lodestone', probably influenced by Anglo-Norman French magnete (from Latin magnes, magnet-).

magnetic ▶ adjective 1 having the properties of a magnet; exhibiting magnetism: the clock has a magnetic back to stick to the fridge.
■ capable of being attracted by or acquiring the properties of a magnet: steel is magnetic. ■ relating to or involving magnetism: an airborne magnetic survey.
■ (of a bearing in navigation) measured relative to magnetic north.
2 very attractive or alluring: his magnetic personality.
– DERIVATIVES magnetically adverb.
– ORIGIN early 17th cent.: from late Latin magneticus, from Latin magneta (see MAGNET).

magnetic compass ▶ noun another term for COMPASS (in sense 1).

magnetic disk ▶ noun see DISC (sense 1).

magnetic equator ▶ noun the irregular imaginary line, passing round the earth near the equator, on which a magnetic needle has no dip (see DIP sense 4).

magnetic field ▶ noun a region around a magnetic material or a moving electric charge within which the force of magnetism acts.

magnetic inclination ▶ noun another term for DIP (in sense 5).

magnetic induction ▶ noun [mass noun]
1 magnetic flux or flux density.
2 the process by which an object or material is magnetized by an external magnetic field.

magnetic mine ▶ noun a mine detonated by the proximity of a magnetized body such as a ship or tank.

magnetic moment ▶ noun Physics the property of a magnet that interacts with an applied field to give a mechanical moment.

magnetic needle ▶ noun a piece of magnetized steel used as an indicator on the dial of a compass and in magnetic and electrical apparatus.

magnetic north ▶ noun the direction in which the north end of a compass needle or other freely suspended magnet will point in response to the earth's magnetic field. It deviates from true north over time and from place to place because the earth's magnetic poles are not fixed in relation to its axis.

magnetic pole ▶ noun each of the points near the extremities of the axis of rotation of the earth or another celestial body where a magnetic needle dips vertically.
■ each of the two points or regions of an artificial or natural magnet to and from which the lines of magnetic force are directed.

magnetic resonance imaging (abbrev.: MRI) ▶ noun [mass noun] a form of medical imaging which measures the response of the atomic nuclei of body tissues to high-frequency radio waves when placed in a strong magnetic field, and produces images of the internal organs.

magnetic storm ▶ noun a disturbance of the magnetic field of the earth (or other celestial body).

magnetic tape ▶ noun [mass noun] tape used in recording sound, pictures, or computer data.

magnetic termite ▶ noun a North Australian termite which builds tall flattened mounds that are aligned north–south.
• Amitermes meridionalis, family Termitidae.

magnetic variation ▶ noun see VARIATION (sense 1).

magnetism ▶ noun [mass noun] a physical phenomenon produced by the motion of electric charge, which results in attractive and repulsive forces between objects.
■ the property of being magnetic. ■ figurative the ability to attract and charm people: his personal magnetism attracted men to the brotherhood.

All magnetism is due to circulating electric currents. In magnetic materials the magnetism is produced by electrons orbiting within the atoms; in most substances the magnetic effects of different electrons cancel each other out, but in some, such as iron, a net magnetic field can be induced by aligning the atoms.

– ORIGIN early 17th cent.: from modern Latin magnetismus, from Latin magneta (see MAGNET).

magnetite /'magnɪtʌɪt/ ▶ noun [mass noun] a grey-black magnetic mineral which consists of an oxide of iron and is an important form of iron ore.
– ORIGIN mid 19th cent.: from MAGNET + -ITE[1]. magnetize (also -ise) ▶ verb [with obj.] give magnetic properties to; make magnetic.

■ figurative attract strongly as if by a magnet.
– DERIVATIVES magnetizable adjective, magnetization noun, magnetizer noun.

magneto ▶ noun (pl. -os) a small electric generator containing a permanent magnet and used to provided high-voltage pulses, especially (formerly) in the ignition systems of internal-combustion engines.

– ORIGIN late 19th cent.: abbreviation of MAGNETO-ELECTRIC.

magneto- /mag'ni:təʊ/ ▶ combining form relating to a magnet or magnetism: magneto-electric.

magneto-electric ▶ adjective relating to the electric currents generated in a material by its motion in a magnetic field.
■ (of an electric generator) using permanent magnets.
– DERIVATIVES magneto-electricity noun.

magnetograph ▶ noun an instrument for recording measurements of magnetic forces.

magnetohydrodynamics /mag,ni:təʊ,hʌɪdrə(ʊ)dʌɪ'namɪks/ ▶ plural noun [treated as sing.] the branch of physics that studies the behaviour of an electrically conducting fluid such as a plasma or molten metal acted on by a magnetic field.
– DERIVATIVES magnetohydrodynamic adjective.

magnetometer /,magnɪ'tɒmɪtə/ ▶ noun an instrument used for measuring magnetic forces, especially the earth's magnetism.
– DERIVATIVES magnetometry noun.

magnetomotive force /mag,ni:tə(ʊ)'məʊtɪv/ ▶ noun Physics a quantity representing the line integral of the magnetic intensity around a closed line (e.g. the sum of the magnetizing forces along a circuit).

magneton /'magnɪtɒn/ ▶ noun a unit of magnetic moment in atomic and nuclear physics.
– ORIGIN early 20th cent.: from MAGNETIC + -ON.

magneto-optical ▶ adjective of, relating to, or employing both optical and magnetic phenomena or technology.

magnetopause ▶ noun the outer limit of a magnetosphere.

magnetoresistance ▶ noun Physics the dependence of the electrical resistance of a body on an external magnetic field.
– DERIVATIVES magnetoresistive adjective.

magnetosphere ▶ noun the region surrounding the earth or another astronomical body in which its magnetic field is the predominant effective magnetic field.
– DERIVATIVES magnetospheric adjective.

magnetotail ▶ noun Astronomy the broad elongated extension of the earth's magnetosphere on the side away from the sun.

magnetron /'magnɪtrɒn/ ▶ noun an electron tube for amplifying or generating microwaves, with the flow of electrons controlled by an external magnetic field.
– ORIGIN early 20th cent.: from MAGNETIC + -tron from ELECTRON.

Magnificat /mag'nɪfɪkat/ ▶ noun a canticle used in Christian liturgy, especially at vespers and evensong, the text being the hymn of the Virgin Mary (Luke 1:46–55).
– ORIGIN Middle English: Latin, literally 'magnifies' (from the opening words, which translate as 'my soul magnifies the Lord').

magnification ▶ noun [mass noun] the action or process of magnifying something or being magnified, especially visually: visible under high magnification.
■ [count noun] the degree to which something is or can be magnified: at this magnification the pixels making up the image become visible. ■ [count noun] the magnifying power of an instrument: this microscope should give a magnification of about ×100. ■ [count noun] a magnified reproduction of something.

magnificence ▶ noun [mass noun] the quality of being magnificent.
■ (His/Your etc. Magnificence) chiefly historical a title given to a monarch or other distinguished person, or used in addressing them.

magnificent ▶ adjective 1 impressively beautiful, elaborate, or extravagant; striking: a dramatic landscape of magnificent mountains | the interior layout is magnificent.
2 very good; excellent: she paid tribute to their magnificent efforts.
– DERIVATIVES magnificently adverb.
– ORIGIN late Middle English: via Old French from Latin magnificent- 'making great, serving to magnify', based on magnus 'great'.

magnifico /mag'nɪfɪkəʊ/ ▶ noun (pl. -oes) informal an eminent, powerful, or illustrious person.
– ORIGIN late 16th cent.: Italian, 'magnificent', originally used to denote a Venetian magnate.

magnify ▶ verb (-ies, -ied) [with obj.] 1 make (something) appear larger than it is, especially with a lens or microscope: the retinal image will be magnified.
■ increase the volume of (a sound). ■ intensify: the risk is magnified if there is any dirty material next to the skin. ■ exaggerate the importance or effect of: she tended to magnify the defects of those she disliked.
2 archaic extol; glorify: praise the Lord and magnify Him.
– DERIVATIVES magnifier noun.
– ORIGIN late Middle English (in the senses 'show honour to (God)' and 'make greater in size or importance'): from Old French magnifier or Latin magnificare, based on Latin magnus 'great'. Sense 1 dates from the mid 17th cent.

magnifying glass ▶ noun a lens that produces an enlarged image, typically set in a frame with a handle and used to examine small or finely detailed things such as fingerprints, stamps, and fine print.

magniloquent /mag'nɪləkwənt/ ▶ adjective using high-flown or bombastic language.
– DERIVATIVES magniloquence noun, magniloquently adverb.
– ORIGIN mid 17th cent.: from Latin magniloquus (from magnus 'great' + -loquus '-speaking') + -ENT.

Magnitogorsk /,magnɪtə'gɔ:sk/ an industrial city in southern Russia, on the Ural River close to the border with Kazakhstan; pop. 443,000 (1990).

magnitude /'magnɪtju:d/ ▶ noun [mass noun] 1 the great size or extent of something: they may feel discouraged at the magnitude of the task before them.
■ great importance: events of tragic magnitude.
2 size: electorates of less than average magnitude.
■ [count noun] a numerical quantity or value: the magnitudes of all the economic variables could be determined.
3 the degree of brightness of a star. The magnitude of an astronomical object is now reckoned as the negative logarithm of the brightness; a decrease of one magnitude represents an increase in brightness of 2.512 times.
■ [count noun] the class into which a star falls by virtue of its brightness. ■ [count noun] a difference of one on a scale of brightness, treated as a unit of measurement.
– ORIGIN late Middle English (also in the sense 'greatness of character'): from Latin magnitudo, from magnus 'great'.

magnolia /mag'nəʊlɪə/ ▶ noun a tree or shrub with large, typically creamy-pink, waxy flowers. Magnolias are widely grown as specimen trees.
● Genus Magnolia, family Magnoliaceae.
■ [mass noun] a pale creamy-white colour like that of magnolia blossom.
– ORIGIN modern Latin, named after Pierre Magnol (1638–1715), French botanist.

Magnolia State informal name for MISSISSIPPI.

magnox /'magnɒks/ ▶ noun [mass noun] a magnesium-based alloy used to enclose uranium fuel elements in some nuclear reactors.
■ (Magnox) [as modifier] denoting the first widely used British design of nuclear power station, which used fuel clad with this alloy.
– ORIGIN 1950s: from the phrase mag(nesium) n(o) ox(idation).

magnum /'magnəm/ ▶ noun (pl. magnums) a thing of a type that is larger than normal, in particular:
■ a wine bottle of twice the standard size, normally 1½ litres. ■ [often as modifier] (trademark in the US) a gun designed to fire cartridges that are more powerful than its calibre would suggest.
– ORIGIN late 18th cent.: from Latin, neuter (used as a noun) of magnus 'great'.

magnum opus /,magnəm 'əʊpəs, 'ɒpəs/ ▶ noun (pl. magnum opuses or magna opera /,magnə 'əʊpərə, 'ɒpərə/) a large and important work of art, music, or literature, especially one regarded as the most important work of an artist or writer.
– ORIGIN late 18th cent.: from Latin, 'great work'.

Magnus effect /'magnəs/ ▶ noun [mass noun] Physics the force exerted on a rapidly spinning cylinder or sphere moving through air or another fluid in a direction at an angle to the axis of spin. This force is responsible for the swerving of balls when hit or thrown with spin.
– ORIGIN 1920s: named after Heinrich G. Magnus (1802–70), German scientist.

Magog see GOG AND MAGOG.

magpie ▶ noun 1 a long-tailed crow with boldly marked (or green) plumage and a raucous voice.
● Family Corvidae: five genera and several species, in particular the black-and-white (black-billed) magpie (Pica pica) of Eurasia and North America.
2 (also bell magpie) chiefly Austral. any bird of the Australasian butcher-bird family, having black-and-white plumage and musical calls.
● Family Cracticidae: several species, in particular the Australian (or black-backed) magpie (Gymnorhina tibicen).
3 used in similes or comparisons to refer to a person who collects things, especially things of little use or value, or a person who chatters idly.
4 the division of a circular target next to the outer one; a shot which strikes this.
– ORIGIN late 16th cent.: probably shortening of dialect maggot the pie, maggoty-pie, from Magot (Middle English pet form of the given name Marguerite) + PIE[2]. magpie lark ▶ noun a common ground-dwelling Australian songbird with black-and-white plumage, long legs, and a loud piping call. Also called PEEWEE.

● Grallina cyanoleuca, family Grallinidae (which is sometimes taken to include the mud-nesters).

magpie moth ▶ noun a white moth with black and yellow spots, the caterpillars of which are similarly coloured and feed on fruit bushes, where they can be a pest.
● Genus Abraxas, family Geometridae: several species, in particular A. grossulariata.

Magritte /ma'gri:t, French magʀit/, René (François Ghislain) (1898–1967), Belgian surrealist painter. His paintings display startling or amusing juxtapositions of the ordinary, the strange, and the erotic, depicted in a realist manner.

magsman ▶ noun (pl. -men) Austral. informal a confidence trickster.
■ a person who likes telling stories; a raconteur.
– ORIGIN early 19th cent.: from English dialect mag 'prattle' + MAN.

maguey /'magweɪ/ ▶ noun an agave plant, especially one yielding pulque.
– ORIGIN mid 16th cent.: via Spanish from Taino.

magus /'meɪgəs/ ▶ noun (pl. magi /'meɪdʒʌɪ/) a member of a priestly caste of ancient Persia.
■ a sorcerer.
– ORIGIN Middle English: via Latin and Greek from Old Persian maguš.

mag wheel ▶ noun N. Amer. a motor-vehicle wheel made from lightweight magnesium steel, typically having a pattern of holes or spokes around the hub.

Magyar /'magja:/ ▶ noun 1 a member of a people who originated in the Urals and migrated westwards to settle in what is now Hungary in the 9th century AD.
2 [mass noun] the Uralic language of this people; Hungarian.

– DERIVATIVES manless adjective.

– ORIGIN Old English man(n), (plural) menn (noun), mannian (verb), of Germanic origin; related to Dutch man, German Mann, and Sanskrit manu 'mankind'.

USAGE Traditionally the word man has been used to refer not only to adult males but also to human beings in general, regardless of sex. There is a historical explanation for this: in Old English the principal sense of man was 'a human being', and the words wer and wif were used to refer specifically to 'a male person' and 'a female person' respectively. Subsequently, man replaced wer as the normal term for 'a male person', but at the same time the older sense 'a human being' remained in use.
In the second half of the twentieth century the generic use of man to refer to 'human beings in general' (as in reptiles were here long before man appeared on the earth) became problematic; the use is now often regarded as sexist or at best old-fashioned. In some contexts, alternative terms such as the human race or humankind may be used. Fixed phrases and sayings such as time and tide wait for no man can be easily rephrased, e.g. time and tide wait for nobody. However, in other cases, particularly in compound forms, alternatives have not yet become established: there are no standard accepted alternatives for manpower or the verb man, for example.

-man ▶ combining form in nouns denoting:

■a male of a specified nationality or origin: Frenchman | Yorkshireman. ■ a man belonging to a distinct specified group: layman. ■ a person, especially a male, having a specified occupation or role: exciseman | chairman | oarsman. ■ a ship of a specified kind: merchantman.

USAGE Traditionally, the form -man was combined with other words to create a term denoting an occupation or role, as in fireman, layman, chairman, and freshman. As the role of women in society has changed, with the result that women are now more likely to be in roles previously held exclusively by men, many of these terms ending in -man have been challenged as sexist and out of date. As a result, there has been a gradual shift away from -man compounds except where referring to a specific male person. Alternative gender-neutral terms are used, for example firefighter and fresher, and new ones which only a few decades ago seemed odd or awkward today seem unexceptionable: chair/chairperson, layperson, and sportsperson.
