Christianity ▶ noun [mass noun] the religion based on the person and teachings of Jesus of Nazareth, or its beliefs and practices.

■Christian quality or character: you may know a man by his Christianity.

Christianity is today the world's most widespread religion, with more than a billion members, mainly divided between the Roman Catholic, Protestant, and Eastern Orthodox Churches. It originated among the Jewish followers of Jesus of Nazareth, who believed that he was the promised Messiah (or 'Christ'), but the Christian Church soon became an independent organization, largely through the missionary efforts of St Paul. In 313 Constantine ended official persecution in the Roman Empire and in 380 Theodosius I recognized it as the state religion. Most Christians believe in one God in three Persons (the Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit) and that Jesus is the Son of God who rose from the dead after being crucified; a Christian hopes to attain eternal life after death through faith in Jesus Christ and tries to live by his teachings as recorded in the New Testament.

– ORIGIN Middle English: from Old French crestiente, from crestien 'Christian', influenced by late Latin christianitas, from Latin Christianus, from Christus 'Christ'.

– PHRASES beyond (or without) compare of a quality or nature surpassing all others of the same kind: a diamond beyond compare. compare notes (of two or more people) exchange ideas, opinions, or information about a particular subject.
– ORIGIN late Middle English: from Old French comparer, from Latin comparare, from compar 'like, equal', from com- 'with' + par 'equal'.

USAGE Is there any difference between compare with and compare to, and is one more correct than the other? There is a slight difference, in that it is usual to use to rather than with when describing the resemblance, by analogy, of two quite different things, as in critics compared Ellington's music to the music of Beethoven and Brahms. In the sense 'estimate the similarity or dissimilarity between', it is traditionally held that with is more correct than to, as in schools compared their facilities with those of others in the area. However, in practice the distinction is not clear-cut and both compare with and compare to can be used in either context.

comparison ▶ noun 1 a consideration or estimate of the similarities or dissimilarities between two things or people: they drew a comparison between Gandhi's teaching and that of other teachers | [mass noun] the two books invite comparison with one another.
■an analogy: perhaps the best comparison is that of seasickness. ■ [mass noun] the quality of being similar or equivalent: when it comes to achievements this season, there's no comparison between Linfield and Bangor.
2 [mass noun] Grammar the formation of the comparative and superlative forms of adjectives and adverbs.
– PHRASES bear (or stand) comparison be of sufficient quality to be likened favourably to someone or something of the same kind. beyond comparison another way of saying beyond compare (see COMPARE). by/in comparison when compared: the Prime Minister's support staff is tiny in comparison with that of a US President.
– ORIGIN Middle English: from Old French comparesoun, from Latin comparatio(n-), from comparare 'to pair, match' (see COMPARE).

compartment ▶ noun 1 a separate section or part of something, in particular:
■a division of a railway carriage marked by partitions: a first-class compartment. ■ a section of a container in which certain items can be kept separate from others: there's some ice cream in the freezer compartment. ■ a division of a ship's hull: the aft cargo compartment. ■ figurative an area in which something can be considered in isolation from other things: religion and politics should be kept in different compartments.

■ surround or hem in on all sides: we were compassed round by a thick fog.

– ORIGIN Middle English: from Old French compas (noun), compasser (verb), based on Latin com- 'together' + passus 'a step or pace'. Several senses ('measure', 'artifice', 'circumscribed area', and 'pair of compasses') which appeared in Middle English are also found in Old French, but their development and origin are uncertain. The transference of sense to the magnetic compass is held to have occurred in the related Italian word compasso, from the circular shape of the compass box.

compass card ▶ noun a circular rotating card showing the 32 principal bearings, forming the indicator of a magnetic compass.

compassion ▶ noun [mass noun] sympathetic pity and concern for the sufferings or misfortunes of others: the victims should be treated with compassion.

3 Grammar one or more words, phrases, or clauses governed by a verb (or by a nominalization or a predicative adjective) that complete the meaning of the predicate. In generative grammar, all the constituents of a sentence that are governed by a verb form the complement.

■ (in systemic grammar) an adjective or noun that has the same reference as either the subject (as mad in he is mad) or the object (as mad in he drove her mad or manager in they appointed him manager).

4 [mass noun] Physiology a group of proteins present in blood plasma and tissue fluid which combine with an antigen–antibody complex to bring about the lysis of foreign cells.

▶ verb /'kɒmplɪment/ [with obj.] contribute extra or contrasting features to (someone or something) in such a way as to improve or enhance their qualities: a classic blazer complements a look that's smart or casual.

■ add to or make complete: the proposals complement the incentives already available.

– PHRASES in her complement Heraldry (of the moon) depicted as full.

– DERIVATIVES complemental adjective.

– ORIGIN late Middle English (in the sense 'completion'): from Latin complementum, from complere 'fill up' (see COMPLETE). Compare with COMPLIMENT.

USAGE Complement and compliment (together with related words such as complementary and complimentary) are frequently confused. They are pronounced in the same way but have quite different meanings: as a verb complement means 'add to (something) in a way that enhances or improves', as in a classic blazer complements a look that's smart or casual, while compliment means 'admire and praise (someone) for something', as in he complimented her on her appearance. Mistakes are common, particularly where complimentary is meant but complementary is written, as in honeymooners receive complementary fruit and flowers.

complementarity ▶ noun (pl. -ies) [mass noun] a relationship or situation in which two or more different things enhance or emphasize each other's qualities or form a balanced whole: a culture based on the complementarity of men and women.

■ Physics the concept that two contrasted theories, such as the wave and particle theories of light, may be able to explain a set of phenomena, although each separately only accounts for some aspects.

complementary ▶ adjective 1 (of two or more different things) combining in such a way as to form a complete whole or to enhance or emphasize each other's qualities: the second TV network was complementary to the BBC.

■ Biochemistry (of gene sequences, nucleotides, etc.) related by the rules of base pairing.

2 make (something bad) worse; intensify the negative aspects of: prisoners' lack of contact with the outside world compounds their problems.
3 Law forbear from prosecuting (a felony) in exchange for money or other consideration.
■settle (a debt or other matter) in this way: he compounded the case with the defendant for a cash payment.
– DERIVATIVES compoundable adjective.
– ORIGIN late Middle English compoune (verb), from Old French compoun-, present tense stem of compondre, from Latin componere 'put together'. The final -d was added in the 16th cent. on the pattern of expound and propound.

USAGE The sense of the verb compound which means 'make (something bad) worse', as in this compounds their problems, has an interesting history. It arose through a misinterpretation of the phrase compound a felony, which, strictly speaking, means 'forbear from prosecuting a felony in exchange for money or other consideration'. The 'incorrect' sense has become the usual one in legal uses and, by extension, in general senses too, and is now accepted as part of standard English.

compound[2] /ˈkɒmpaʊnd/ ▶ noun an area enclosed by a fence, in particular:
■an open area in which a factory or large house stands. ■ an open area in a prison, prison camp, or work camp. ■ S. African a fenced area containing single-sex living quarters for migrant workers, especially miners. ■ another term for POUND[3].

comprise ▶ verb [with obj.] consist of; be made up of: the country comprises twenty states.
■make up; constitute: this single breed comprises 50 per cent of the Swiss cattle population | (be comprised of) documents are comprised of words.
– ORIGIN late Middle English: from French, 'comprised', feminine past participle of comprendre, from Old French comprehender (see COMPREHEND).

USAGE 1 According to traditional usage, comprise means 'consist of', as in the country comprises twenty states, and should not be used to mean 'constitute or make up (a whole)', as in this single breed comprises 50 per cent of the Swiss cattle population. But confusion has arisen because of uses in the passive, which have been formed by analogy with words like compose: when comprise is used in the active (as in the country comprises twenty states) it is, oddly, more or less synonymous with the passive use of the second sense (as in the country is comprised of twenty states). Such passive uses of comprise are common and are fast becoming part of standard English. Other erroneous forms, such as the property comprises of bedroom, bathroom, and kitchen, should not be used in standard English.
2 On the differences between comprise and include, see usage at INCLUDE.

compromise ▶ noun an agreement or settlement of a dispute that is reached by each side making concessions: eventually they reached a compromise | [mass noun] the secret of a happy marriage is compromise.

– ORIGIN from Greek kruos 'frost'.

cryobiology ▶ noun [mass noun] the branch of biology which deals with the properties of organisms and tissues at low temperatures.

– DERIVATIVES cryobiological adjective, cryobiologist noun.

cryogen /'krʌɪə(ʊ)dʒ(ə)n/ ▶ noun a substance used to produce very low temperatures.

cryogenics /ˌkrʌɪə(ʊ)'dʒɛnɪks/ ▶ plural noun [treated as sing.] the branch of physics dealing with the production and effects of very low temperatures.

■another term for CRYONICS.
– DERIVATIVES cryogenic adjective.

cryoglobulin /ˌkrʌɪə(ʊ)ˈglɒbjʊlɪn/ ▶ noun Biochemistry a protein which occurs in the blood in certain disorders. It can be precipitated out of solution below 10°C, causing obstruction in the fingers and toes.

cryolite /ˈkrʌɪəlʌɪt/ ▶ noun [mass noun] a white or colourless mineral consisting of a fluoride of sodium and aluminium. It is added to bauxite as a flux in aluminium smelting.
– ORIGIN early 19th cent.: from CRYO- 'cold, frost' (because the main deposits are found in Greenland) + -LITE.

cryonics /krʌɪˈɒnɪks/ ▶ plural noun [treated as sing.] the practice or technique of deep-freezing the bodies of those who have died of an incurable disease, in the hope of a future cure.
– DERIVATIVES cryonic adjective.
– ORIGIN 1960s: contraction of CRYOGENICS.

cryoprecipitate /ˌkrʌɪəʊprɪˈsɪpɪtət/ ▶ noun chiefly Biochemistry a substance precipitated from a solution, especially from the blood, at low temperatures.
■[mass noun] Medicine an extract rich in a blood-clotting factor obtained as a residue when frozen blood plasma is thawed.

cryopreserve ▶ verb [with obj.] Biology & Medicine preserve (cells or tissues) by cooling them below the freezing point of water.
– DERIVATIVES cryopreservation noun.

cryoprotectant ▶ noun Physiology a substance that prevents the freezing of tissues, or prevents damage to cells during freezing.

cryostat /ˈkrʌɪə(ʊ)stat/ ▶ noun an apparatus for maintaining a very low temperature.
■an apparatus for taking very fine slices of tissue while it is kept very cold.

cryosurgery ▶ noun [mass noun] surgery using the local application of intense cold to destroy unwanted tissue.

cryotherapy ▶ noun [mass noun] the use of extreme cold in surgery or other medical treatment.

crypt ▶ noun 1 an underground room or vault beneath a church, used as a chapel or burial place.
2 Anatomy a small tubular gland, pit, or recess.
– ORIGIN late Middle English (in the sense 'cavern'): from Latin crypta, from Greek kruptē 'a vault', from kruptos 'hidden'.

cryptanalysis ▶ noun [mass noun] the art or process of deciphering coded messages without being told the key.
– DERIVATIVES cryptanalyst noun, cryptanalytic adjective, cryptanalytical adjective.
– ORIGIN 1920s: from CRYPTO- + ANALYSIS.

cryptic ▶ adjective 1 having a meaning that is mysterious or obscure: he found his boss's utterances too cryptic.
■(of a crossword) having difficult clues which indicate the solutions indirectly.

– DERIVATIVES cryptozoological adjective, cryptozoologist noun.

crystal ▶ noun 1 a piece of a homogeneous solid substance having a natural geometrically regular form with symmetrically arranged plane faces.
■Chemistry any solid consisting of a symmetrical, ordered, three-dimensional aggregation of atoms or molecules. ■Electronics a crystalline piece of semiconductor used as an oscillator or transducer.
■[mass noun] a clear transparent mineral, especially quartz.
2 (also crystal glass) [mass noun] highly transparent glass with a high refractive index: [as modifier] a crystal chandelier.
■articles made of such glass: a collection of crystal.
■[count noun] the glass over a watch face.
▶ adjective clear and transparent like crystal: the clean crystal waters of the lake.
– PHRASES crystal clear completely transparent and unclouded. ■unambiguous; easily understood: the house rules are crystal clear.
– ORIGIN late Old English (denoting ice or a mineral resembling it), from Old French cristal, from Latin crystallum, from Greek krustallos 'ice, crystal'. The chemistry sense dates from the early 17th cent.

crystal axis ▶ noun each of three axes used to define the edges of the unit cell of a crystal.

crystal ball ▶ noun a solid globe of glass or rock crystal, used by fortune tellers and clairvoyants for crystal-gazing.

crystal class ▶ noun each of thirty-two categories of crystals classified according to the possible combinations of symmetry elements possessed by the crystal lattice.

crystal form ▶ noun a set of crystal faces defined according to their relationship to the crystal axes.

crystal-gazing ▶ noun [mass noun] looking intently into a crystal ball with the aim of seeing images relating to future or distant events.
■figurative attempting to forecast the future.

crystal healing (also crystal therapy) ▶ noun [mass noun] the use of the supposed healing powers of crystals in alternative medicine.

crystal lattice ▶ noun the symmetrical three-dimensional arrangement of atoms inside a crystal.

crystallin /ˈkrɪst(ə)lɪn/ ▶ noun [mass noun] Biochemistry a protein of the globulin class present in the lens of the eye.
– ORIGIN mid 19th cent.: from Latin crystallum 'crystal' + -IN[1].

crystalline /ˈkrɪst(ə)lʌɪn/ ▶ adjective having the structure and form of a crystal; composed of crystals: a crystalline rock.
■poetic/literary very clear: he writes a crystalline prose.
– DERIVATIVES crystallinity noun.
– ORIGIN Middle English: from Old French cristallin, via Latin from Greek krustallinos, from krustallos (see CRYSTAL).

crystalline lens ▶ noun the lens of the eye.

crystalline sphere ▶ noun historical (in ancient and medieval astronomy) a transparent sphere of the heavens postulated to lie between the fixed stars and the primum mobile and to account for the precession of the equinox and other motions.

crystallite /ˈkrɪst(ə)lʌɪt/ ▶ noun an individual perfect crystal or region of regular crystalline structure in the substance of a material, typically of a metal or a partly crystalline polymer.
■a very small crystal.

crystallize (also -ise) ▶ verb form or cause to form crystals: [no obj.] when most liquids freeze they crystallize.
■figurative make or become definite and clear: [no obj.] vague feelings of unrest crystallized into something more concrete | [with obj.] writing can help to crystallize your thoughts. ■[usu. as adj. crystallized] coat and impregnate (fruit or petals) with sugar as a means of preserving them: a box of crystallized fruits. ■Finance convert or be converted from a floating charge into a fixed charge.
– DERIVATIVES crystallizable adjective, crystallization noun.

crystallography /ˌkrɪstəˈlɒgrəfi/ ▶ noun [mass noun] the branch of science concerned with the structure and properties of crystals.
– DERIVATIVES crystallographer noun, crystallographic adjective, crystallographically adverb.

crystalloid ▶ adjective resembling a crystal in shape or structure.
▶ noun 1 Botany a small crystal-like mass of protein in a plant cell.
2 Chemistry a substance that, when dissolved, forms a true solution rather than a colloid and is able to pass through a semipermeable membrane.

crystal meth ▶ noun see METH (sense 1).

Crystal Palace a large building of prefabricated iron and glass resembling a giant greenhouse, designed by Joseph Paxton for the Great Exhibition of 1851 in Hyde Park, London, and re-erected at crystal system ▶ noun each of seven categories of crystals (cubic, tetragonal, orthorhombic, trigonal, hexagonal, monoclinic, and triclinic) classified according to the possible relations of the crystal axes.

crystal therapy ▶ noun another term for CRYSTAL HEALING.

crystal violet ▶ noun [mass noun] a synthetic violet dye, related to rosaniline, used as a stain in microscopy and as an antiseptic in the treatment of skin infections.

CS Brit. ▶ abbreviation for ■ chartered surveyor. ■ Civil Service. ■ Court of Session.

Cs ▶ symbol for the chemical element caesium.

c/s ▶ abbreviation for cycles per second.

CSA ▶ abbreviation for Child Support Agency.

csardas /'tʃɑ:daʃ, 'zɑ:dəs/ (also czardas) ▶ noun (pl. same) a Hungarian dance with a slow introduction and a fast, wild finish.
– ORIGIN mid 19th cent.: from Hungarian csárdás, from csárda 'inn'.

CSC Brit. ▶ abbreviation for Civil Service Commission.

CSE ▶ abbreviation for Certificate of Secondary Education.

CS gas ▶ noun [mass noun] a powerful form of tear gas used particularly in the control of riots.
– ORIGIN 1960s: from the initials of Ben B. Corson (born 1896) and Roger W. Stoughton (1906–57), the American chemists who discovered the properties of the chemical in 1928.

CSIRO ▶ abbreviation for (in Australia) Commonwealth Scientific and Industrial Research Organization.

CSM ▶ abbreviation for ■ command and service modules (see COMMAND MODULE). ■ (in the UK) Committee on Safety of Medicines. ■ Company Sergeant Major.

CST ▶ abbreviation for Central Standard Time (see CENTRAL TIME).

CSU ▶ abbreviation for (in the UK) Civil Service Union.

CT ▶ abbreviation for ■ computerized (or computed) tomography. ■ Connecticut (in official postal use).

ct ▶ abbreviation for ■ carat: 18 ct gold. ■ cent.

CTC ▶ abbreviation for ■ City Technology College. ■ (in the UK) Cyclists' Touring Club.

ctenidium /tɪ'nɪdɪəm/ ▶ noun (pl. ctenidia /-dɪə/) Zoology a comb-like structure, especially a respiratory organ or gill in a mollusc, consisting of an axis with a row of projecting filaments.
– ORIGIN late 19th cent.: modern Latin, from Greek ktenidion, diminutive of kteis, kten- 'comb'.

ctenoid /'ti:nɔɪd/ ▶ adjective Zoology (of fish scales) having many tiny projections on the edge like the teeth of a comb, as in many bony fishes. Compare with GANOID and PLACOID.
– ORIGIN mid 19th cent.: from Greek kteis, kten- 'comb' + -OID.

Ctenophora /ti:'nɒfərə, tɛ-/ Zoology a small phylum of aquatic invertebrates that comprises the comb jellies.
– DERIVATIVES ctenophore /'ti:nəfɔ:, 'tɛ-/ noun.
– ORIGIN modern Latin (plural), from Greek kteis, kten- 'comb' + pherein 'to bear'.

Ctesiphon /'tɛsɪf(ə)n/ an ancient city on the Tigris near Baghdad, capital of the Parthian kingdom from *c.*224 and then of Persia under the Sassanian dynasty. It was taken by the Arabs in 636 and destroyed in the 8th century.

CTS ▶ abbreviation for carpal tunnel syndrome.

CTT ▶ abbreviation for capital transfer tax.

CU ▶ abbreviation for Christian Union.

Cu ▶ symbol for the chemical element copper.
– ORIGIN from late Latin cuprum.

cu. ▶ abbreviation for cubic (in units of measurement: for example, cu. ft. = cubic feet).

cuadrilla /kwɒ'dri:ljə, -'dri:jə/ ▶ noun a matador's team.

dangling participle ▶ noun Grammar a participle intended to modify a noun which is not actually present in the text.

USAGE A participle is a word formed as an inflection of the verb, such as arriving or arrived. A dangling participle is one which is left 'hanging' because, in the grammar of the clause, it does not relate to the noun it should. In the sentence arriving at the station, she picked up her case the construction is correct because the participle arriving and the subject she relate to each other (she is the one doing the arriving). But in the following sentence, a dangling participle has been created: arriving at the station, the sun came out. We know, logically, that it is not the sun which is arriving but grammatically that is exactly the link which has been created. Such errors are frequent, even in written English, and can give rise to genuine confusion.

Daniel a Hebrew prophet (6th century BC), who spent his life as a captive at the court of Babylon. ■to a lesser extent than appears the case: the idea was deceptively simple. ■ to a greater extent than appears the case: the airy and deceptively spacious lounge.

USAGE Deceptively belongs to a very small set of words whose meaning is genuinely ambiguous in that it can be used in similar contexts to mean both one thing and also its complete opposite. A deceptively smooth surface is one which appears smooth but in fact is not smooth at all, while a deceptively spacious room is one that does not look spacious but is in fact more spacious than it appears. But what is a deceptively steep gradient? Or a person who is described as deceptively strong? To avoid confusion, it is probably best to reword and not to use deceptively in such contexts at all.

2 historical kill one in every ten of (a group of people) as a punishment for the whole group.

– DERIVATIVES decimation noun, decimator noun.

– ORIGIN late Middle English: from Latin decimat- 'taken as a tenth', from the verb decimare, from decimus 'tenth'. In Middle English the term decimation denoted the levying of a tithe, and later the tax imposed by Cromwell on the Royalists (1655). The verb decimate originally alluded to the Roman punishment of executing one man in ten of a mutinous legion.

USAGE Historically, the meaning of the word decimate is 'kill one in every ten of (a group of people)'. This sense has been more or less totally superseded by the later, more general sense 'kill or destroy (a large proportion of)', as in the virus has decimated the population. Some traditionalists argue that this and other later senses are incorrect, but it is clear that this is now part of standard English.
