– DERIVATIVES differently adverb, differentness noun.
– ORIGIN late Middle English: via Old French from Latin different- 'carrying away, differing', from the verb differre (see DIFFER).

USAGE Different from, different than, and different to: are there any distinctions between these three collocations, and is one more correct than the others? Since the 18th century, different than has been singled out by critics as incorrect. In practice, different from is the most common structure, both in the UK and North America, while different than is almost exclusively used in North America. It is difficult to sustain the view in modern standard English that one is more correct than the others, however. There is little difference in sense between the three, and all of them are used by respected writers.

– ORIGIN early 19th cent.: from medieval Latin differentiat- 'carried away from', from the verb differentiare, from differentia (see DIFFERENTIA).

differently abled ▶ adjective chiefly N. Amer. disabled.

USAGE Differently abled was first proposed (in the 1980s) as an alternative to disabled, handicapped, etc. on the grounds that it gave a more positive message and so avoided discrimination towards people with disabilities. Despite this, the term has gained little currency and has been criticized as both over-euphemistic and condescending. The accepted term in general use is disabled.

difficult ▶ adjective needing much effort or skill to accomplish, deal with, or understand: she had a difficult decision to make | the questions are too difficult for the children.
■characterized by or causing hardships or problems: a difficult economic climate. ■ (of a person) not easy to please or satisfy; awkward: Lily could be difficult.
– DERIVATIVES difficultly adverb (rare), difficultness noun.

double negative ▶ noun Grammar a negative statement containing two negative elements (for example didn't say nothing).
■ a positive statement in which two negative elements are used to produce the positive force, usually for some particular rhetorical effect, for example there is not nothing to worry about!

USAGE According to standard English grammar, a double negative used to express a single negative, such as I don't know nothing (rather than I don't know anything), is incorrect. The rules dictate that the two negative elements cancel each other out to give an affirmative statement, so that I don't know nothing would be interpreted as I know something.
In practice this sort of double negative is widespread in dialect and other non-standard usage and rarely gives rise to confusion as to the intended meaning. Double negatives are standard in certain other languages such as Spanish and they have not always been unacceptable in English, either. It was normal in Old English and Middle English and did not come to be frowned upon until some time after the 16th century, when attempts were made to relate the rules of language to the rules of formal logic.
Modern (correct) uses of the double negative give an added subtlety to statements: saying I am not unconvinced by his argument suggests reservations in the speaker's mind that are not present in its 'logical' equivalent: I am convinced by his argument.

– ORIGIN early 20th cent.: named after ELECTRA.

electress /ɪ'lɛktrɪs/ ▶ noun [usu. as title] historical the wife of a German elector.

electret /ɪ'lɛktrɪt/ ▶ noun Physics a permanently polarized piece of dielectric material, analogous to a permanent magnet.
– ORIGIN late 19th cent.: blend of ELECTRICITY and MAGNET.

electric /ɪ'lɛktrɪk/ ▶ adjective of, worked by, charged with, or producing electricity: an electric cooker.
■figurative having or producing a sudden sense of thrilling excitement: the atmosphere was electric.
▶ noun 1 (electrics) Brit. the system of electric wiring and parts in a house or vehicle: there's something wrong with the electrics—the lights are always going out.
2 (electric) an electric train or other vehicle.
– DERIVATIVES electrically adverb.
– ORIGIN mid 17th cent.: from modern Latin electricus, from Latin electrum 'amber', from Greek ēlektron (because rubbing amber causes electrostatic phenomena).

electrical ▶ adjective concerned with, operating by, or producing electricity: an electrical transformer.
■(of a company or shop) manufacturing or selling electrical appliances.
▶ noun (electricals) electrical equipment or circuitry.
■shares in companies manufacturing electrical goods.

electric-arc furnace ▶ noun a furnace which uses an electric arc as a heat source, especially for steel-making.

electric blanket ▶ noun an electrically wired blanket used for heating a bed.

electric blue ▶ noun [mass noun] a steely or brilliant light blue.

electric chair ▶ noun a chair in which convicted criminals are executed by electrocution, especially in parts of the US.

electric eel ▶ noun a large eel-like freshwater fish of South America, using pulses of electricity to kill prey, assist in navigation, and for defence.
• Electrophorus electricus, the only member of the family Electrophoridae.

electric eye ▶ noun informal a photoelectric cell operating a relay when the beam of light illuminating it is obscured.

electric fence ▶ noun a fence through which an electric current can be passed, giving an electric shock to any person or animal touching it.

electric field ▶ noun Physics a region around a charged particle or object within which a force would be exerted on other charged particles or objects.

electric fire ▶ noun Brit. an electrically operated incandescent or convector heater, typically a portable one for domestic use.

electric guitar ▶ noun a guitar with a built-in pickup or pickups which convert sound vibrations into electrical signals for amplification.

electric hare ▶ noun see HARE.

electrician ▶ noun a person who installs and maintains electrical equipment.

electricity /ɪˌlɛk'trɪsɪti, ˌɛl-, ˌiːl-/ ▶ noun [mass noun] a form of energy resulting from the existence of charged particles (such as electrons or protons), either statically as an accumulation of charge or dynamically as a current.
■the supply of electric current to a house or other building for heating, lighting, or powering appliances: the electricity was back on | [as modifier] the regional electricity companies. ■ figurative a state or feeling of thrilling excitement: the atmosphere was charged with a dangerous sexual electricity.

electric organ ▶ noun 1 Music an organ in which the sound is made electrically rather than by pipes.
2 Zoology an organ in certain fishes which is used to produce an electrical discharge for stunning prey, sense the surroundings, or as a defence.

electric ray ▶ noun a sluggish bottom-dwelling marine ray that typically lives in shallow water and can produce an electric shock for the capture of prey and for defence. Also called torpedo ray.
• Family Torpedinidae: several genera, in particular Torpedo, and many species.

electric shaver (also electric razor) ▶ noun an electrical device for shaving, with oscillating or rotating blades behind a metal guard.

electric shock ▶ noun a sudden discharge of electricity through a part of the body.

electric storm ▶ noun a thunderstorm or other violent disturbance of the electrical condition of the atmosphere.

electrify /ɪ'lɛktrɪfʌɪ/ ▶ verb (-ies, -ied) [with obj.] charge with electricity; pass an electric current through: [as adj. electrified] an electrified fence.
■(often be electrified) convert (a machine or system, especially a railway line) to the use of electrical power. ■ [often as adj. electrifying] figurative cause a sudden sense of thrilling excitement in (someone): the electrifying effect produced by Coleridge's passionate eloquence.
– DERIVATIVES electrification noun, electrifier noun.
– ORIGIN mid 18th cent.: from ELECTRIC + -FY.

electro /ɪ'lɛktrəʊ/ ▶ noun (pl. -os) 1 short for ELECTROTYPE or ELECTROPLATE.
2 [mass noun] a style of dance music with a fast beat and synthesized backing track.

electro- ▶ combining form of, relating to, or caused by electricity; involving electricity and .... electroconvulsive | electromagnetism.

electro-acoustic ▶ adjective involving the direct conversion of electrical into acoustic energy or vice versa.
■(of a guitar) having both a pickup and a reverberating hollow body.
▶ noun an electro-acoustic guitar.

electrocardiogram /ɪˌlɛktrəʊˈkɑːdɪəgram/ ▶ noun Medicine a record or display of a person's heartbeat produced by electrocardiography.

electrocardiograph /ɪˌlɛktrəʊˈkɑːdɪəgrɑːf/ ▶ noun a machine used for electrocardiography.

electrocardiography /ɪˌlɛktrəʊˌkɑːdɪˈɒgrəfi/ (abbrev.: ECG) ▶ noun [mass noun] the measurement of electrical activity in the heart and its recording as a visual trace (on paper or on an oscilloscope screen), using electrodes placed on the skin of the limbs and chest.
– DERIVATIVES electrocardiographic adjective.

electrocautery /ɪˌlɛktrəʊˈkɔːtəri/ ▶ noun [mass noun] cautery using a needle or other instrument that is electrically heated.

electrochemistry ▶ noun [mass noun] the branch of chemistry that deals with the relations between electrical and chemical phenomena.
– DERIVATIVES electrochemical adjective, electrochemically adverb, electrochemist noun.

electrochromism /ɪˌlɛktrə(ʊ)ˈkrəʊmɪz(ə)m/ ▶ noun [mass noun] Chemistry the property of certain dyes of changing colour when placed in an electric field.
– DERIVATIVES electrochromic adjective.

electrocoagulation /ɪˌlɛktrəʊkəʊˌagjʊˈleɪʃ(ə)n/ ▶ noun [mass noun] the coagulation of blood or other tissues by the local application of an electric current to produce concentrated heat.

electroconvulsive ▶ adjective of or relating to the treatment of mental illness by the application of electric shocks to the brain.

electrocorticogram /ɪˌlɛktrə(ʊ)ˈkɔːtɪkə(ʊ)gram/ ▶ noun Physiology a chart or record of the electrical activity of the brain made using electrodes in direct contact with it.

electrocute ▶ verb [with obj.] (often be electrocuted) injure or kill someone by electric shock: a man was electrocuted on the rail track.
– DERIVATIVES electrocution noun.
– ORIGIN late 19th cent.: from ELECTRO-, on the pattern of execute.

electrocyte /ɪˈlɛktrə(ʊ)sʌɪt/ ▶ noun Zoology a modified muscle or nerve cell that generates electricity in the electric organ of certain fishes.

electrode /ɪˈlɛktrəʊd/ ▶ noun a conductor through which electricity enters or leaves an object, substance, or region.
– ORIGIN mid 19th cent.: from ELECTRIC + Greek hodos 'way', on the pattern of anode and cathode.

electrodermal /ɪˌlɛktrə(ʊ)ˈdəːməl/ ▶ adjective of or relating to measurement of the electrical conductivity of the skin, especially as an indicator of someone's emotional responses.

electrodialysis /ɪˌlɛktrəʊdʌɪˈalɪsɪs/ ▶ noun [mass noun] Chemistry dialysis in which the movement of ions is aided by an electric field applied across the semipermeable membrane.

electrodynamics ▶ plural noun [usu. treated as sing.] the branch of mechanics concerned with the interaction of electric currents with magnetic fields or with other electric currents.
– DERIVATIVES electrodynamic adjective.

electroencephalogram /ɪˌlɛktrəʊɪnˈsɛf(ə)ləgram, -ˈkɛf-/ ▶ noun a test or record of brain activity produced by electroencephalography.

electroencephalograph /ɪˌlɛktrəʊɪnˈsɛf(ə)ləgrɑːf, -ˈkɛf-/ ▶ noun a machine used for electroencephalography.

electroencephalography /ɪˌlɛktrəʊɪnˌsɛfəˈlɒgrəfi, -ˌkɛf-/ (abbrev.: EEG) ▶ noun [mass noun] the measurement of electrical activity in different parts of the brain and its recording as a visual trace (on paper or on an oscilloscope screen).

electrofish ▶ verb [with obj.] fish (a stretch of water) using electrocution or a weak electric field.

electrogenic /ɪˌlɛktrə(ʊ)ˈdʒɛnɪk/ ▶ adjective Physiology producing a change in the electrical potential of a cell.

electrojet ▶ noun an intense electric current which occurs in a narrow belt in the lower ionosphere, especially in the region of strong auroral displays.

electrokinetic ▶ adjective of or relating to the flow of electricity.

electroless /ɪˈlɛktrəʊlɪs/ ▶ adjective relating to or denoting nickel plating using chemical means, as opposed to electroplating.

electrolier /ɪˌlɛktrəˈlɪə/ ▶ noun a chandelier in which the lights are electrical.
– ORIGIN late 19th cent.: from ELECTRO-, on the pattern of chandelier.

electroluminescence /ɪˌlɛktrəʊluːmɪˈnɛs(ə)ns/ ▶ noun [mass noun] Chemistry luminescence produced electrically, especially by the application of a voltage.
– DERIVATIVES electroluminescent adjective.

electrolyse /ɪˈlɛktrəlʌɪz/ (US electrolyze) ▶ verb [with obj.] subject to or treat by electrolysis.
– DERIVATIVES electrolyser noun.
– ORIGIN mid 19th cent.: from ELECTROLYSIS, on the pattern of analyse.

electrolysis /ˌɪlɛkˈtrɒlɪsɪs, ˌɛl-/ ▶ noun [mass noun] 1 Chemistry chemical decomposition produced by passing an electric current through a liquid or solution containing ions.
2 the removal of hair roots or small blemishes on the skin by the application of heat using an electric current.
– DERIVATIVES electrolytic /ɪˌlɛktrə(ʊ)ˈlɪtɪk/ adjective, electrolytical adjective, electrolytically adverb.

electrolyte /ɪˈlɛktrəlʌɪt/ ▶ noun a liquid or gel which contains ions and can be decomposed by electrolysis, e.g. that present in a battery.
■(usu. electrolytes) Physiology the ionized or ionizable constituents of a living cell, blood, or other organic matter.
– ORIGIN mid 19th cent.: from ELECTRO- + Greek lutos 'released' (from luein 'loosen').

electromagnet ▶ noun Physics a soft metal core made into a magnet by the passage of electric current through a coil surrounding it.

electromagnetic ▶ adjective of or relating to the interrelation of electric currents or fields and magnetic fields.
– DERIVATIVES electromagnetically adverb.

electromagnetic radiation ▶ noun [mass noun] Physics a kind of radiation including visible light, radio waves, gamma rays, and X-rays, in which electric and magnetic fields vary simultaneously.

electromagnetic spectrum ▶ noun [mass noun] Physics the range of wavelengths or frequencies over which electromagnetic radiation extends.

electromagnetic units ▶ plural noun Physics a largely disused system of electrical units derived primarily from the magnetic properties of electric currents.

electromagnetism ▶ noun [mass noun] the phenomenon of the interaction of electric currents or fields and magnetic fields.
■the branch of physics concerned with this.

electromechanical /ɪˌlɛktrəʊmɪˈkanɪk(ə)l/ ▶ adjective of, relating to, or denoting a mechanical device which is electrically operated.

electrometer /ˌɪlɛkˈtrɒmɪtə/ ▶ noun Physics an instrument for measuring electrical potential without drawing any current from the circuit.
– DERIVATIVES electrometric adjective, electrometry noun.

electromotive /ɪˌlɛktrəˈməʊtɪv/ ▶ adjective Physics producing or tending to produce an electric current.

electromotive force (abbrev.: emf) ▶ noun Physics a difference in potential that tends to give rise to an electric current.

electromyogram /ɪˌlɛktrə(ʊ)ˈmʌɪə(ʊ)gram/ ▶ noun Medicine a record or display produced by electromyography.

electromyography /ɪˌlɛktrə(ʊ)mʌɪˈɒgrəfi/ ▶ noun [mass noun] the recording of the electrical activity of muscle tissue, or its representation as a visual display or audible signal, using electrodes attached to the skin or inserted into the muscle.
– DERIVATIVES electromyograph noun, electromyographic adjective, electromyographically adverb.

electron /ɪˈlɛktrɒn/ ▶ noun Physics a stable subatomic particle with a charge of negative electricity, found in all atoms and acting as the primary carrier of electricity in solids.

The electron's mass is about 9×10^{-28}g, 1,836 times less than that of the proton. Electrons orbit the positively charged nuclei of atoms and are responsible for binding atoms together in molecules, as well as for the electrical, thermal, optical, and magnetic properties of solids. Electric currents in metals and in semiconductors consist of a flow of electrons, and light, radio waves, X-rays, and much heat radiation are all produced by accelerating and decelerating electrons.

– ORIGIN late 19th cent.: from ELECTRIC + -ON.

electron beam ▶ noun Physics a stream of electrons in a gas or vacuum.

electron diffraction ▶ noun [mass noun] Physics the diffraction of a beam of electrons by atoms or molecules, used especially for determining crystal structures.

electronegative ▶ adjective 1 Physics electrically negative.
2 Chemistry (of an element) tending to acquire electrons and form negative ions in chemical reactions.
– DERIVATIVES electronegativity noun (in sense 2).

electron gun ▶ noun Physics a device for producing a narrow stream of electrons from a heated cathode.

electronic ▶ adjective 1 (of a device) having or operating with the aid of many small components, especially microchips and transistors, that control and direct an electric current: an electronic calculator | an electronic organ.
■(of music) produced by electronic instruments. ■ of or relating to electronics: a degree in electronic engineering.
2 of or relating to electrons.
3 relating to or carried out using a computer or other electronic device, especially over a network: electronic shopping.
– DERIVATIVES electronically adverb.
– ORIGIN early 20th cent.: from ELECTRON + -IC.

electronic flash ▶ noun Photography a flash from a gas-discharge tube, used in high-speed photography.

electronic mail ▶ noun another term for E-MAIL.

electronic organizer ▶ noun a pocket-sized computer used for storing and retrieving information such as addresses and appointments.

electronic publishing ▶ noun [mass noun] the issuing of books and other material in machine-readable form rather than on paper.

electronics ▶ plural noun [usu. treated as sing.] the branch of physics and technology concerned with the design of circuits using transistors and microchips, and with the behaviour and movement of electrons in a semiconductor, conductor, vacuum, or gas: electronics is seen as a growth industry | [as modifier] electronics engineers.
■[treated as pl.] circuits or devices using transistors, microchips, and other components.

electronic tagging ▶ noun [mass noun] the attaching of electronic markers to people or goods for monitoring purposes, e.g. to track offenders under house arrest or to deter shoplifters.

electron lens ▶ noun Physics a device for focusing a stream of electrons by means of electric or magnetic fields.

electron microscope ▶ noun Physics a microscope with high magnification and resolution, employing electron beams in place of light and using electron lenses.

electron optics ▶ plural noun [treated as sing.] the branch of physics that deals with the behaviour of electrons and electron beams in magnetic and electric fields.

electron pair ▶ noun 1 Chemistry two electrons occupying the same orbital in an atom or molecule.
2 Physics an electron and a positron produced in a high-energy reaction.

electron spin resonance (abbrev.: ESR) ▶ noun [mass noun] Physics a spectroscopic method of locating electrons within the molecules of a paramagnetic substance.

electron tube ▶ noun Physics an evacuated or gas-filled tube in which a current of electrons flows between electrodes.

electronvolt (abbrev.: eV) ▶ noun Physics a unit of energy equal to the work done on an electron in accelerating it through a potential difference of one volt.

electro-oculogram /ɪˌlɛktrəʊˈɒkjələ(ʊ)gram/ ▶ noun a record produced by electro-oculography.

electro-oculography /ɪˌlɛktrəʊɒkjəˈlɒgrəfi/ ▶ noun [mass noun] the measurement of the electrical potential between electrodes placed at points close to the eye, used to investigate eye movements especially in physiological research.
– DERIVATIVES electro-oculographic adjective.

electro-optics ▶ plural noun [treated as sing.] the branch of science that deals with the effect of electric fields on light and on the optical properties of substances.
– DERIVATIVES electro-optic adjective, electro-optical adjective.

electro-osmosis ▶ noun [mass noun] osmosis under the influence of an electric field.
– DERIVATIVES electro-osmotic adjective.

electrophilic /ɪˌlɛktrə(ʊ)ˈfɪlɪk/ ▶ adjective Chemistry (of a molecule or group) having a tendency to attract or acquire electrons. Often contrasted with NUCLEOPHILIC.
– DERIVATIVES electrophile noun.

electrophoresis /ɪˌlɛktrə(ʊ)fəˈriːsɪs/ ▶ noun [mass noun] Physics & Chemistry the movement of charged particles in a fluid or gel under the influence of an electric field.
– DERIVATIVES electrophorese verb, electrophoretic adjective, electrophoretically adverb.
– ORIGIN early 20th cent.: from ELECTRO- + Greek phorēsis 'being carried'.

electrophorus /ˌɪlɛkˈtrɒf(ə)rəs, ɛl-/ ▶ noun Physics a device for repeatedly generating static electricity by induction.
– ORIGIN late 18th cent.: from ELECTRO- + Greek -phoros 'bearing'.

electrophysiology /ɪˌlɛktrəʊfɪzɪˈɒlədʒi/ ▶ noun [mass noun] the branch of physiology that deals with the electrical phenomena associated with nervous and other bodily activity.
– DERIVATIVES electrophysiological adjective, electrophysiologically adverb, electrophysiologist noun.

electroplate /ɪˈlɛktrə(ʊ)pleɪt, ɪˌlɛktrə(ʊ)ˈpleɪt/ ▶ verb [with obj.] [usu. as noun electroplating] coat (a metal object) by electrolytic deposition with chromium, silver, or another metal.
▶ noun [mass noun] electroplated articles.
– DERIVATIVES electroplater noun.

electroplax /ɪˈlɛktrəʊplaks/ (also electroplaque /-plak/) ▶ noun Zoology each of a number of flattened plates of protoplasm that make up the electric organ of certain fishes, e.g. the electric eel.

electroplexy /ɪˈlɛktrəplɛksi/ ▶ noun [mass noun] Brit., dated electroconvulsive therapy.
– ORIGIN 1950s: from ELECTRO- + APOPLEXY.

electropolish /ɪˈlɛktrəʊˌpɒlɪʃ/ ▶ verb [with obj.] [often as noun electropolishing] give a shiny surface to (metal) using electrolysis.

electroporation /ɪˌlɛktrə(ʊ)pəˈreɪʃ(ə)n/ ▶ noun [mass noun] Biology the action or process of introducing DNA or chromosomes into bacteria or other cells using a pulse of electricity to open the pores in the cell membranes briefly.
– DERIVATIVES electroporate verb.

electropositive ▶ adjective 1 Physics electrically positive.
2 Chemistry (of an element) tending to lose electrons and form positive ions in chemical reactions.

electroreception ▶ noun [mass noun] the detection by an aquatic animal of electric fields or currents.
– DERIVATIVES electroreceptor noun.

electroretinogram /ɪˌlɛktrəʊˈrɛtɪnə(ʊ)gram/ ▶ noun a record of the electrical activity of the retina, used in medical diagnosis and research.

electroscope ▶ noun Physics an instrument for detecting and measuring electricity, especially as an indication of the ionization of air by radioactivity.
– DERIVATIVES electroscopic adjective.

electro-selective pattern (abbrev.: ESP) ▶ noun Photography a mode of automatic light-metering in a camera which compensates for differences in the brightness of the central and peripheral portions of the image.

electroshock ▶ adjective [attrib.] of or relating to medical treatment by means of electric shocks: electroshock therapy.

electrostatic ▶ adjective Physics of or relating to stationary electric charges or fields as opposed to electric currents.
– ORIGIN mid 19th cent.: from ELECTRO- + STATIC, on the pattern of hydrostatic.

electrostatic precipitator ▶ noun a device that removes suspended dust particles from a gas or exhaust by applying a high-voltage electrostatic charge and collecting the particles on charged plates.

electrostatics ▶ plural noun [treated as sing.] Physics the study of stationary electric charges or fields as opposed to electric currents.

electrostatic units ▶ plural noun a system of units based primarily on the forces between electric charges.

electrosurgery ▶ noun [mass noun] surgery using a high-frequency electric current to heat and so cut tissue with great precision.
– DERIVATIVES electrosurgical adjective.

electrotechnology ▶ noun [mass noun] the science of the application of electricity in technology.
– DERIVATIVES electrotechnic adjective, electrotechnical adjective, electrotechnics noun.

electrotherapy ▶ noun [mass noun] the use of electric currents passed through the body to stimulate nerves and muscles, chiefly in the treatment of various forms of paralysis.
– DERIVATIVES electrotherapeutic adjective, electrotherapeutical adjective, electrotherapist noun.

electrothermal ▶ adjective Physics of or relating to heat derived from electricity.

electrotype ▶ verb [with obj.] [often as noun electrotyping] make a copy of (something) by the electrolytic deposition of copper on a mould.
▶ noun a copy made in such a way.
– DERIVATIVES electrotyper noun.

electrovalent /ɪˌlɛktrə(ʊ)ˈveɪl(ə)nt/ ▶ adjective Chemistry (of bonding) resulting from electrostatic attraction between positive and negative ions; ionic.
– DERIVATIVES electrovalence noun, electrovalency noun.
– ORIGIN 1920s: from ELECTRO- + -valent, on the pattern of trivalent.

electroweak ▶ adjective Physics relating to or denoting electromagnetic and weak interactions regarded as manifestations of the same interaction.

electrum /ɪˈlɛktrəm/ ▶ noun [mass noun] a natural or artificial alloy of gold with at least 20 per cent of silver, used for jewellery, especially in ancient times.
– ORIGIN late Middle English: via Latin from Greek ēlektron 'amber, electrum'.

electuary /ɪˈlɛktjʊ(ə)ri/ ▶ noun (pl. -ies) archaic a medicinal substance mixed with honey or another sweet substance.
– ORIGIN late Middle English: from late Latin electuarium, probably from Greek ekleikton, from ekleikhein 'lick up'.

eleemosynary /ˌɛlɪːˈmɒsɪnəri, -ˈmɒz-/ ▶ adjective formal of, relating to, or dependent on charity; charitable.
– ORIGIN late 16th cent. (as a noun denoting a place where alms were distributed): from medieval Latin eleemosynarius, from late Latin eleemosyna 'alms', from Greek eleēmosunē 'compassion'(see ALMS).

elegant ▶ adjective pleasingly graceful and stylish in appearance or manner: she will look elegant in black | an elegant, comfortable house.
■(of a scientific theory or solution to a problem) pleasingly ingenious and simple: the grand unified theory is compact and elegant in mathematical terms.
– DERIVATIVES elegance noun, elegantly adverb.
– ORIGIN late 15th cent. (describing a person dressing tastefully): from French, or from Latin elegans, elegant-, related to eligere 'choose, select' (see ELECT).

elegant variation ▶ noun [mass noun] the stylistic fault of studiedly finding different ways to denote the same thing in a piece of writing, merely to avoid repetition.

elegiac /ˌɛlɪˈdʒʌɪək/ ▶ adjective (especially of a work of art) having a pleasing quality of gentle and wistful mournfulness: haunting and elegiac poems.
■(of a poetic metre) used for elegies.
▶ plural noun (elegiacs) verses in an elegiac metre.
– DERIVATIVES elegiacally adverb.
– ORIGIN late 16th cent.: from French élégiaque, or via late Latin, from Greek elegeiakos, from elegeia (see ELEGY).

elegiac couplet ▶ noun a pair of lines consisting of a dactylic hexameter and a pentameter, especially in Greek and Latin verse.

elegize /ˈɛlɪdʒʌɪz/ (also -ise) ▶ verb [no obj.] write in a wistfully mournful way about someone or something.
– DERIVATIVES elegist noun.

elegy /ˈɛlɪdʒi/ ▶ noun (pl. -ies) 1 (in modern literature) a poem of serious reflection, typically a lament for the dead.
2 (in Greek and Roman poetry) a poem written in elegiac couplets, as notably by Catullus and Propertius.
– ORIGIN early 16th cent.: from French élégie, or via Latin, from Greek elegeia, from elegos 'mournful poem'.

element ▶ noun 1 a part or aspect of something abstract, especially one that is essential or characteristic: the death had all the elements of a great tabloid story | there are four elements to the proposal.
■a small but significant presence of a feeling or abstract quality: it was the element of danger he loved in flying. ■ (elements) the rudiments of a branch of knowledge: legal training may include the elements of economics and political science. ■ [usu. with modifier] (often elements) a group of people of a particular kind within a larger group or organization: extreme right-wing elements in the army. ■ Mathematics & Logic an entity that is a single member of a set.
2 (also chemical element) each of more than one hundred substances that cannot be chemically interconverted or broken down into simpler substances and are primary constituents of matter. Each element is distinguished by its atomic number, i.e. the number of protons in the nuclei of its atoms.
■any of the four substances (earth, water, air, and fire) regarded as the fundamental constituents of the world in ancient and medieval philosophy. ■ one of these substances considered as a person's or animal's natural environment: for the islanders, the sea is their kingdom, water their element | figurative she was in her element with doctors and hospitals. ■ (the elements) the weather, especially strong winds, heavy rain, and other kinds of bad weather: there was no barrier against the elements. ■ (elements) (in church use) the bread and wine of the Eucharist.
3 a part in an electric kettle, heater, or cooker which contains a wire through which an electric current is passed to provide heat.
– ORIGIN Middle English (denoting fundamental constituents of the world or celestial objects): via Old French from Latin elementum 'principle, rudiment', translating Greek stoikheion 'step, component part'.

elemental /ˌɛlɪˈmɛnt(ə)l/ ▶ adjective 1 primary or basic: elemental features from which all other structures are compounded.
■concerned with chemical elements or other basic components: elemental analysis. ■consisting of a single chemical element; not chemically combined.
2 related to or embodying the powers of nature: a thunderstorm is the inevitable outcome of battling elemental forces.
■figurative (of a human emotion or action) having the primitive and inescapable character of a force of nature: the urge for revenge was too elemental to be ignored.
▶ noun a supernatural entity or force thought to be physically manifested by occult means.
– DERIVATIVES elementalism noun.
– ORIGIN late 15th cent.: from medieval Latin elementalis, from elementum 'principle, rudiment' (see ELEMENT).

elementary ▶ adjective of or relating to the most rudimentary aspects of a subject: the six stages take students from elementary to advanced level.
■easily dealt with; straightforward and uncomplicated: it's interesting work, although quite a lot of it is elementary. ■ not decomposable into elements or other primary constituents.
– DERIVATIVES elementarily adverb, elementariness noun.
– ORIGIN late Middle English (in the sense 'composed of the four elements, earth, air, fire, and water'): from Latin elementarius, from elementum elementary particle ▶ noun another term for PARTICLE (in sense 1).

'principle, rudiment' (see ELEMENT). Current senses dates from the mid 16th cent.

elementary school ▶ noun N. Amer. a primary school for the first six or eight grades.
■ Brit. historical a school where children were taught between the ages of five and thirteen.

elemi /ˈɛləmi/ ▶ noun [mass noun] an oleoresin obtained from a tropical tree and used in varnishes, ointments, and aromatherapy.
• This resin is obtained from several trees in the family Burseraceae, in particular Bursera simaruba (producing American elemi) and Canarium luzanicum (producing Manila elemi).
– ORIGIN mid 16th cent.: perhaps from Arabic al-lāmī.

elenchus /ɪˈlɛŋkəs/ ▶ noun (pl. elenchi /-kʌɪ/) Logic a logical refutation. See also IGNORATIO ELENCHI.
■ (also Socratic elenchus) [mass noun] the Socratic method of eliciting truth by question and answer, especially as used to refute an argument.
– ORIGIN mid 17th cent. (superseding late Middle English elench): via Latin from Greek elenkhos.

Eleonora's falcon /ˌɛlɪəˈnɔːrəz/ ▶ noun a long-winged falcon that breeds on rocky islands and cliffs in the Mediterranean area, either resembling a dark hobby or with all-black plumage.
• Falco eleonorae, family Falconidae.
– ORIGIN mid 19th cent.: named after Eleonora of Arborea (c.1350–1404), a princess of Sardinia.

elephant ▶ noun (pl. same or elephants) 1 a heavy plant-eating mammal with a prehensile trunk, long curved ivory tusks, and large ears, native to Africa and southern Asia. It is the largest living land animal.
• Family Elephantidae, order Proboscidea: two species. See AFRICAN ELEPHANT, INDIAN ELEPHANT.
2 a size of paper, typically 28 × 23 inches (approximately 711 × 584 mm).
– DERIVATIVES elephantoid /ɛlɪˈfantɔɪd/ adjective.
– ORIGIN Middle English: from Old French elefant, via Latin from Greek elephas, elephant- 'ivory, elephant'.

elephant bird ▶ noun a heavily built, giant flightless bird, found in Madagascar until it was exterminated in about AD 1000. The eggs, which are still found occasionally, are the largest known. Also called AEPYORNIS.
• Family Aepyornithidae, genera Aepyornis and Mullerornis: several species, including A. maximus, which is the heaviest known bird.

2 a grave crime or sin: the enormities of the Hitler regime.
- ORIGIN late Middle English: via Old French from Latin enormitas, from enormis, from e- (variant of ex-) 'out of' + norma 'pattern, standard'. The word originally meant 'deviation from legal or moral rectitude' and 'transgression'. Current senses have been influenced by ENORMOUS.

USAGE It is not uncommon for enormity to be used as a synonym for hugeness or immensity, as in the enormity of French hypermarkets. There are some people who regard this use as wrong, arguing that enormity in its original sense meant 'a crime' and should therefore continue to be used only of contexts in which a negative moral judgement is implied. Between 5 and 10 per cent of uses in the British National Corpus use enormity in a neutral sense, however, and the use is now broadly accepted in standard English.

enormous ▶ adjective very large in size, quantity, or extent: her enormous blue eyes | the possibilities are enormous.
- DERIVATIVES enormously adverb [as submodifier] she has been enormously successful, enormousness noun.

- DERIVATIVES enquirer noun.
- ORIGIN Middle English enquere, from Old French enquerre, based on Latin inquirere (based on quaerere 'seek').

USAGE Usage guides have traditionally drawn a distinction between enquire and inquire, implying that, in British English at least, enquire is used for general senses of 'ask', while inquire is reserved for uses meaning 'make a formal investigation'. In practice, however, enquire (and enquiry) is more common in British English while inquire (and inquiry) is more common in US English, but otherwise there is no readily discernible distinction in the way the two words are used.

enquiring ▶ adjective showing an interest in learning new things: an open, enquiring mind. ■ (of a look or expression) suggesting that information is sought: he sent her an enquiring glance.

2 [mass noun] either of the two main languages of this people (Inuit and Yupik), comprising a major division of the Eskimo-Aleut family.
▶ adjective of or relating to the Eskimos or their languages.
– ORIGIN an Algonquian word, perhaps in the sense 'people speaking a different language'.

USAGE In recent years, the word Eskimo has come to be regarded as offensive (partly through the associations of the now discredited folk etymology 'one who eats raw flesh'). The peoples inhabiting the regions from NW Canada to western Greenland prefer to call themselves Inuit: see usage at INUIT. The term Eskimo, however, continues to be the only term which can be properly understood as applying to the people as a whole and is still widely used in anthropological and archaeological contexts.

Eskimo-Aleut ▶ noun [mass noun] the family of languages comprising Inuit, Yupik, and Aleut.

especial /ɪˈspɛʃ(ə)l, ɛ-/ ▶ adjective [attrib.] better or greater than usual: special: these traditions are of especial interest to feminists.
■ for or belonging chiefly to one person or thing: her outburst was for my especial benefit.
– ORIGIN late Middle English: via Old French from Latin specialis 'special', from species (see SPECIES).

especially ▶ adverb 1 used to single out one person, thing, or situation over all others: he despised them all, especially Sylvester | a new song, written especially for Jonathan.
2 to a great extent; very much: he didn't especially like dancing | [as submodifier] sleep is especially important in growing children.

USAGE There is some overlap in the uses of especially and specially. In the broadest terms, both words mean 'particularly' and the preference for one word over the other is linked with particular conventions of use rather than with any deep difference in meaning. For example, there is little to choose between written especially for Jonathan and written specially for Jonathan and neither is more correct than the other. On the other hand, in sentences such as he despised them all, especially Sylvester, substitution of specially is found in informal uses but should not be used in written English, while in the car was specially made for the occasion substitution of especially is somewhat unusual. Overall, especially is by far the commoner of the two, occurring more than nine times as frequently as specially in the British National Corpus.

Esperanto /ˌɛspəˈrantəʊ/ ▶ noun [mass noun] an artificial language devised in 1887 as an international medium of communication, based on roots from the chief European languages. It retains the structure of these languages and has the advantage of grammatical regularity and ease of pronunciation.
– DERIVATIVES Esperantist noun.
– ORIGIN from the name Dr Esperanto, used as a pen-name by the inventor of the language, Ludwik L. Zamenhof (1858–1917), Polish physician; the literal sense is 'one who hopes' (based on Latin sperare 'to hope').

espial /ɪˈspʌɪ(ə)l, ɛ-/ ▶ noun [mass noun] archaic the action of watching or catching sight of something or someone or the fact of being seen: he withdrew from his point of espial.

-ess¹ ▶ suffix forming nouns denoting female gender: abbess | adulteress | tigress.
– ORIGIN from French -esse, via late Latin from Greek -issa.

USAGE The suffix -ess has been used since the Middle Ages to form nouns denoting female persons, using a neutral or a male form as the base (as hostess and actress from host and actor, for example). Despite the apparent equivalence between the male and female pairs of forms, however, they are rarely equivalent in terms of actual use and connotation in modern English (consider the differences in meaning and use between manager and manageress or poet and poetess). In the late 20th century, as the role of women in society changed, some of these feminine forms have become problematic and are regarded as old-fashioned, sexist, and patronizing (e.g. poetess, authoress, editress). The 'male' form is increasingly being used as the 'neutral' form, where the gender of the person concerned is simply unspecified.

-ess² ▶ suffix forming abstract nouns from adjectives, such as largess.
– ORIGIN Middle English via French -esse from Latin -itia.

2 [usu. treated as sing.] the branch of knowledge that deals with moral principles.

Schools of ethics in Western philosophy can be divided, very roughly, into three sorts. The first, drawing on the work of Aristotle, holds that the virtues (such as justice, charity, and generosity) are dispositions to act in ways that benefit both the person possessing them and that person's society. The second, defended particularly by Kant, makes the concept of duty central to morality: humans are bound, from a knowledge of their duty as rational beings, to obey the categorical imperative to respect other rational beings. Thirdly, utilitarianism asserts that the guiding principle of conduct should be the greatest happiness or benefit of the greatest number.

– DERIVATIVES ethicist noun.

ethidium bromide /ɛ'θɪdɪəm/ ▶ noun [mass noun] Chemistry a purple synthetic dye used in the treatment of trypanosome blood infection, to stain DNA, and to destroy the superhelical structure of DNA. It is a derivative of phenanthridine.

Ethiopia /ˌi:θɪ'əʊpɪə/ a country in NE Africa, on the Red Sea; pop. 45,892,000 (est. 1993); languages, Amharic (official), several other Afro-Asiatic languages; capital, Addis Ababa. Former name ABYSSINIA.

Ethiopia is the oldest independent country in Africa, having a recorded civilization that dates from the 2nd millennium BC. Little known to Europeans until the late 19th century, it was invaded and conquered by Italy in 1935. The emperor Haile Selassie was restored by the British in 1941 and ruled until overthrown in a Marxist coup in 1974. The subsequent period was marked by civil war, fighting against separatist guerrillas in Eritrea and Tigray, and by repeated famines; after the fall of the government in 1991 a multiparty system was adopted.

evolution /ˌi:və'lu:ʃ(ə)n, 'ɛv-/ ▶ noun [mass noun] 1 the process by which different kinds of living organism are thought to have developed and diversified from earlier forms during the history of the earth.

The idea of organic evolution was proposed by some ancient Greek thinkers but was long rejected in Europe as contrary to the literal interpretation of the Bible. Lamarck proposed a theory that organisms became transformed by their efforts to respond to the demands of their environment, but he was unable to explain a mechanism for this. Lyell demonstrated that geological deposits were the cumulative product of slow processes over vast ages. This helped Darwin towards a theory of gradual evolution over a long period by the natural selection of those varieties of an organism slightly better adapted to the environment and hence more likely to produce descendants. Combined with the later discoveries of the cellular and molecular basis of genetics, Darwin's theory of evolution has, with some modification, become the dominant unifying concept of modern biology.
